

Lisa McNeilly

Director of Sustainability, City of Baltimore

Lisa McNeilly is the Director of Sustainability for the City of Baltimore, where she leads a team charged with creating, nurturing, and implementing initiatives that promote environmental, economic, and social sustainability. Previously, she was the Director of Sustainability and Energy at the University of California, Berkeley, served as regional program director for the Nature Conservancy, managed sustainability and compliance for facilities at the Grand Canyon, and directed international programs at the Pew Center on Global Climate Change. She holds a Master's degree in Public Policy from Princeton and an undergraduate degree in Mathematics from Davidson College.